
Revolutionising Health Outcomes for Indigenous Women

Initiative Type

Model of Care

Status

Deliver

Added

02 May 2018

Last updated

10 January 2024

URL

<https://cnxp3cuvtvrn68yjaibaht5ywrxspj7m.clinicalexcellence.qld.gov.au/improvement-exchange/revolutionising-health-outcomes-indigenous-women>

Summary

Key elements of the Women's Health Nurse Practitioner rural initiative include collaboration with local GP-Obstetricians, advanced practice nurses in remote primary healthcare centres and specialists visiting Obstetric services provided by Cairns (FROGS).

Key dates

Jan 2017

Jan 2018

Implementation sites

Hopevale, Wujal Wujal and Laura in a hub-spoke model from Cooktown.

Key Contacts

Kym Boyes

1057

paul.blee.hiu

Nurse Practitioner Women's Health

Torres and Cape Hospital and Health Service

(07) 4043 0171

Kym.Boyes@health.qld.gov.au

Aim

Improve access and continuity of women's health services in a remote and rural community.

Benefits

- improved cervical screening rates including patient initiated appointments.
- improved access to reproduction, sexual health counselling.
- improved investigation and management of gynaecological conditions.
- improved Sexually Transmitted Disease (STI) screening, management and population health directed care.

Background

Cooktown was the first site in Queensland to establish a Women's Health Nurse Practitioner role, in 2008. It exemplifies a Nurse Practitioner (NP) model working to the full scope of their ability – especially in rural Queensland. The position itself has grown, and skills acquired to better meet the service's needs.

Evaluation and Results

In addition to improved continuity of care, the health service has seen a growing trust and even reliance on the service provided to our indigenous communities and success measures.

PDF saved 22/11/2024